Dear Bob:

I would like to join your many friends and colleagues in expressing to you best wishes in your retirement.

For over fifteen of your forty-one years of service to our country the Central Intelligence Agency has been fortunate in counting you among its staff. Your outstanding devotion to duty and professional ability have resulted in numerous commendations and appreciations; you have been the recipient of awards from public organizations for your contributions in the field of printing and publishing. The dedication of our new and modern printing facility, staffed with the organization that you developed, was a fitting climax to your efforts on behalf of the Agency. All of these and more are matters of which you may be justly proud.

We are losing a man of achievement to well-earned retirement. Please accept my personal appreciation, as also that of the Agency, for a job well done.

Sincerely,

SIGNED R. L. Bannerman
